Comment of the Week

"If we're courageous, a guided tour of a marijuana farm would be ground breaking, and interesting to tourists. Almost all cruisers I've talked to about marijuana favor it, but find it cutting edge to talk about."

— "ED Denson1," discussing possible "excursions" for cruise ship passengers in Eureka.

Finding my way

I'll pick up my crappy ole guitar
That I don't know how to play
I'll learn it on the road
Hoppin' from train to train
I got my rucksack,
With pen and paper
So I can write down all this stuff
That I've got running freely in my head
While I'm finding my way
You might see me on a bridge
Wonderin' if it's safe to jump
And I'll take a leap of faith
Only to see if I'll make it
Now I'm walking around
Knowin' why I jumped when I did
Oh, now I know

— Lucas Holland-Bresnahan

C'mon, Commish

Editor:

I agree with Judy Hodgson's assessment of Aaron Newman continuing as a harbor commissioner ("Politics, Hunting — Both Sports," Nov. 27). It should be obvious that the fox is in the hen house and has been there many, many times, and knows how to avoid the appearance of illegal activities. His guilty plea to the charges when finally caught and his continuing as a commissioner indicate a lack of understanding of the role of elected officials. They are to uphold the laws of the community not flaunt them. I am dismayed that ethical standards are being ignored by citizens and commissioners alike and he is encouraged to stay in his position as a harbor commissioner.

I would like him to recognize his ethical conflict and resign.

A Minor Celebration

One of the country's oldest movie theaters turns 100

By Heidi Walters

heidwalters@northcoastjournal.com

The Minor Theatre — the oldest surviving multi-reel feature film theater in the United States — turns 100 this month. There likely will be no little girls with golden harps, no perfume christening and no flapping pigeons, as in the inaugural dedication. But there might be speeches. Possibly, the local smoky perfume will trickle in from elsewhere, as happens on occasion. And there will be a special production.

The theater, at 10th and H streets in Arcata, opened its doors on Dec. 3, 1914, and nearly half of Arcata's 1,200 residents swarmed in to fill the 524 seats and stand in the aisles, according to the Arcata Union. Isaac Minor, the merchant who built the theater with nickelodeon owner Mrs. Bert Pettengill, told attendees the theater was the safest fire haven in town, with its 13-inch reinforced concrete walls and floor, nine exits and steel-shuttered glass projection ports ready to slam shut if the nitrate film caught fire (a common occurrence back then). Then the silent film The Chimes — Charles Dickens' second rich-poor moral tale after A Christmas Carol — was shown, accompanied by a five-piece orchestra. The next night, the show sold out again. The new theater also had a stage, and on Dec. 8 the first play opened to a full house: Her Own Way, performed by the drama class of the brand new Humboldt State Normal School, which had opened in April. It was a benefit for the Belgian Relief Fund.

The Pettengills ran the theater six months then sold the lease to Byard & Byard's California Theatre Co. The company installed a pipe organ, and ran it until 1927, struggling financially and burning old tires to heat the place. George Mann's Redwood Theatres ran it next, brought in sound and showed the theater's first talkie, Honey, in 1930. The Minor closed in 1938, just before Mann opened the bigger, more modern Arcata Theatre a block away. It reopened in 1946, and closed again in 1962 when television took off. It sat empty and crumbling for 10 years. The city of Arcata wanted to turn it into a parking lot. But in 1971 a group of Humboldt State University film students formed the Minor Theatre Corp., leased the theater, renovated it and on Jan. 1, 1972 held a grand re-opening with a sold-out double-feature: San Francisco, starring Clark Gable, and A Night at the Opera, starring the Marx Brothers. Simplex the cat moved in, warming laps and watching movies until she died in 1981 in the balcony. She's buried on site, says David Phillips, one of the Minor Theatre Corp.'s original members.

The corporation bought the Minor, and the attached apartments and storefronts, in 1980. Phillips and Michael Thomas became the sole owners, and in 1988 expanded and spruced up the place: a new marquee, the latest equipment, two new screens, a new heating system and more. They also owned the Broadway Theatre, Bayshore Mall's The Movies, and Mill Creek Theatre in McKinleyville. But the Minor was special — it had to be, says Phillips, to survive drawing from Arcata's small and diverse population.

"The Minor was an oddball little theater," he says. "We showed a lot of movies that appealed to a lot of people."

They did family shows, afternoon bargain shows; midnight shows every weekend; the Rocky Horror Picture Show weekly and afternoon surfing movies. They hosted film series including the Spike and Mike animations, school and community groups, film classes and film festivals. The Showbill calendar announced each week's eclectic offerings.

In 2006, Phillips and Thomas sold the three big theater complexes to Oregon-based Coming Attractions, and leased the Minor to the company under the condition it be run as a theater.

Coming Attractions modernized all of the theaters but tried to maintain the Minor's quirky programming, says Lee Fuchsmann, Coming Attractions' vice president and director of film. But it was hard, she says, because people could watch classic and second-run movies at home. Today's programming is a mix of mainstream and art films, with regular show times and no more series or film classes. Occasionally, there's a special event, such as this Friday's documentary Pelican Dreams followed by a Q-and-A with wildlife rescuers. The theater still hosts a Latino film festival, and plans to resume hosting HSU's short-film festival in April, says Lee.

Coming Attractions' lease on the Minor is up in 2016. Al Lane, Coming Attractions' president and CEO, won't say what will happen then. "We're pleased with the way things are now," he says. "In a year we'll look at it again."

If Coming Attractions doesn't re-sign, Phillips says he and his wife, LouAnna, and Thomas will look for another operator. And if one can't be found?

"I guess we'll get back in the movie business again," Phillips says. "It'd kind of be fun."

For now, there's the centennial to celebrate. On Monday, Dec. 8, at 7 p.m., the theater will host a radio reading by HSU's drama department of the first play performed there in 1914, Her Own Way. Tickets are $12 and it's a benefit for the Emma Center.

Lane says he'll be there, along with other senior management. "It's an opportunity for us and HSU to take a beautiful old building and put a spotlight on it for a night," he says. ●

grant@northcoastjournal.com

The peals of freedom will continue to reverberate in Uruguyan stoners' ears: Last week's presidential election in the South American pot paradise all but ensures that the country will create "the world's first state-run marijuana marketplace," according to NBC News.

Uruguay legalized marijuana in 2012 under the direction of President Jose Mujica. Designed to undermine drug traffickers who, by some accounts, were growing in power in the country, the move was unpopular with citizens.

Mujica made it legal to grow marijuana at home or through a registered club and, perhaps more revolutionary, to purchase marijuana grown by the government through a pharmacy.

That cultivation and distribution plan, which is still being ironed out, was challenged by one of Uruguay's more conservative presidential hopefuls. But on Sunday, the nation's previously anti-legalization populace voted 53 percent to 40 percent to elect Tabare Vazquez, who acted as the nation's president from 2005 to 2010. Vazquez is expected to continue Uruguay's marijuana marketplace program.

Legalization is affecting the international drug trade, as Mexico's rural marijuana farmers are finding it more and more difficult to make a living.

A grower in the hills of the Sinaloa state ("Mexico's marijuana heartland") told an NPR reporter that prices have dropped by around 50 percent in the last several years. Previously, the unidentified cultivator said he could get $60 to $90 per kilo (2.2 pounds), but nowadays could only fetch $30 to $40 a kilo.

The plummeting price reflects a growing desire for pot grown in the U.S.A. — most notably among Americans, where it's becoming easier to get with spreading legalization, but also among Mexican buyers.

"We know the cartels are already smuggling cash into Mexico," a DEA spokesman told NPR. "If you can buy some really high-quality weed [in the U.S.], why not smuggle it south, too, and sell it at a premium?"

What will happen with Mexico's small marijuana farmers? The NPR interviewee said he'll likely turn to opium poppies.

Cross your fingers and blow. Washington state students and faculty are developing a breathalyzer test for THC. Currently, people suspected of doped driving are subject to blood tests. About a quarter of those came back positive in Washington State in 2013, according to the Seattle Times, but the results aren't immediately available to arresting officers.

While Washington does have a legal threshold of blood-THC level to determine impairment, it's unlikely that the breathalyzer under development will be able to detect a specific level of weed influence. The device will simply detect the presence of THC, which "could prove helpful to officers as they decide whether to arrest a suspected impaired driver," according to a Washington State University chemistry professor in charge of the project.

And your week in head-scratching headlines, both courtesy MSN:

3 LA Deputies Recovering After Entering Small Marijuana Farm (they were "overcome by fumes").

The Kardashians put Dave Grohl off marijuana (he was overcome by asininity).

Lame Duck Dynasty

“Councilman...?”

The final vote tally sure was a nail-biter, but leading news outlets are now confirming that the failed re-election bids of Mike Newman and Chet Albin will usher in the first all-female city council in Eureka's 160-year history.

With mustache-free governance set to convene shortly in a seaport near you, it appears some of us are taking the news better than others. From the look of things, Mayor Frank Jager isn't on the short list to win the Susan B. Anthony Award.

Evidence of hizzoner's Testosterone Withdrawal Disorder was on display when he opened the inaugural post-election meeting by introducing Eureka's Ward 4 representative as “Councilman Ciarabellini.” If I'm not mistaken, Jager was referring to Melinda Ciarabellini.

Perhaps the good Mayor was tired? Possibly. The genderific flub was delivered, however, during the first item on the evening's agenda. (Visit the @BuhneTribune Twitter feed to view the clip.)

Or, did the 160-year glass ceiling shattered by councilwomen-elect Kim Bergel and Natalie Arroyo crash someone's party? Whatever the explanation, it looks like a certain presiding official could use a bro-hug.

Quack, Quack ...

Whether he likes it or not, Mayor Jager's conservative-veering henchmen, Chester and Michael, are scheduled to depart the council dais — stage-right — around the time most Eurekans are finishing up their last-minute Christmas shopping.

Speaking of last-minute, was anyone other than councilman Albin in favor of handing out $30,000 to a consultant last month to whisper in our ears about what a charming, popular cruise ship port-of-call the Eureka harbor would make — if only we could swindle a few gullible cruise lines into docking here?

Anyone taking that bail will have to overlook the fact that Eureka is renowned for suffering the coldest summers in the lower 48, its Julys and Augusts pretty much an endless string of one damp, dreary day after the next. The other three seasons — drought years aside — normally trend windy or wet; not the first thing that pops into most people's minds when planning a vacation.

Having pocketed a 30-large “consulting fee,” trade consultant and Cruise the West Vice President Bruce Conner doesn't dwell on such trifles. With Albin smugly looking on, Conner addressed a recent council meeting, where he glad-handed our elects into accepting our seaport's viability to accommodate northward-bound cruise junkets. Did Conner even look at our harbor? Well then surely he's aware of the majestic, Chernobyl-like grandeur of our defunct, bayside pulp mills. The homeless tent cities ringing the bay are another unique can't-miss; I'm told the going rate for taking an Instagram selfie with a homeless dude sets you back one pack of generic smokes.

But here's hoping the “Con” succeeds. As proposed, Eureka would be penciled into ship itineraries that presently include, according to the presentation, other, aesthetically comparable ports of call.

You know, like Santa Barbara and Seattle.

Chief Ugg Boots' Urban Bicycle Bash-up

Forget about enticing tourists to cruise the bay. Extreme sport hipsters will flock to town when word gets out about the latest adrenaline-rush hitting the streets of Eureka.

Just in time for the dark, rainy streets of winter, Chief Ugg Boots' way-cool plan to forbid cyclists from riding on the sidewalk could transform Eureka's non-existent bike lanes into exciting, do-or-die corridors of mayhem.

It turns out our top cop, Andrew Mills — a groovy SoCal expat — is a marketing genius. And just think, no consulting fee required!

As Chief Ugg apparently is well aware, several pinch-points throughout town force cyclists to “share” all of about six-inches of roadway with speeding automobile traffic. A couple of our narrower passages also happen to be the busiest:

Henderson and E streets (pictured), and Buhne and S streets feature paper-thin bike lanes with frightening, tire-swallowing storm drains.

As a result, sharing the road beside any vehicle larger than a Mini Cooper gives thrill-seeking cyclists a choice between getting arrested for daring to encroach on the chief's sacred sidewalk (while saving their life), or risking it all in a round of Urban Bicycle Bash-Up.

As a bonus, any cyclist maimed in a transit bus vs. bike collision could, one imagines, be in for a hefty insurance settlement.

Bungee-jumping and zip-lining? Suddenly looking a little tepid by comparison, huh? ●

When the Waters Rose

Fifty years later, Humboldt County remembers the 1964 flood

It had been dubbed the flood of the century, when the rain came down in sheets in 1955 and Humboldt County’s rivers rose to gobble homes and towns. Nine years later, it happened again, but worse.

By the start of December 1964, Humboldt was already wet. A series of storms in November had left the ground saturated and the rivers full. Higher elevations were experiencing a near-unprecedented amount of snow for so early in the season. The conditions were perfect.

Reginald Kennedy, a service hydrologist with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration’s station on Woodley Island, explained that in mid-December a storm 500 miles wide, extending from near Hawaii to the coasts of Oregon and Northern California, reached shore. “The combination of this very moist warm air, strong west-southwest winds and orographic lift of the mountain ranges oriented at nearly right angles to the flow of the air resulted in heavy rain” through Dec. 23. “Today, we use the term atmospheric river to describe this type of weather phenomenon.”

“The Dec. 19-23 storm was of unprecedented intensity in the region,” states a California Department of Water Resources report, noting that Etersburg on the Mattole River registered a staggering 50 inches of rain during the period, including 15 inches on Dec. 22 alone. Standish-

Hickey State Recreation Area recorded 22 inches of rain in a single 24-hour period during the onslaught. (That’s more rain than Eureka recorded last year.)

The warm storm also raised the freezing level to 10,000 feet, meaning buckets of warm rainfall were coming down onto the near-record November snowpack. This sent fresh snowmelt rushing down into local rivers, which quickly swelled, rising 18 inches an hour in some places. Daily discharge measurements taken at the mouth of the Eel River show flows increased from less than 10,000 cubic feet per second on Dec. 19 to nearly 700,000 cubic feet per second the following week. The results were catastrophic.

“Usually, the Eel River is narrow enough to throw a baseball across,” wrote Donald Garrett, a member of a search and rescue team based out of Moffett Field that was deployed in the days before Christmas 1964. “It lay below us now a 5-mile swath of river.”

At Miranda, the high-water mark reached 46 feet. The town of Klamath was covered by 15 feet of water. Riverside towns like Orleans, Myers Flat, Weott, South Fork, Shively, Pepperwood, Stafford and Ti-Bar were decimated, while Metropolitan, Rio Dell, Scotia and Ferndale were heavily damaged. In total, more than 10 million acre feet of water was discharged into the Pacific Ocean from the North Coast’s rivers and streams between Dec. 20 and Dec. 26. Logging camps were wiped out by the onslaught of water, which also breached the Pacific Lumber Company’s log pond in Scotia, sending thousands of old growth logs barreling downriver. Massive logjams battered everything in their path, knocking homes off foundations and taking out bridges on their way out to sea. More than a dozen bridges in Humboldt County were destroyed; Fernbridge was the county’s only major water crossing to survive the flood.

Across the North Coast, 24 people died, including 19 in Humboldt County, where another 1,200 were injured. The county recorded more than $53 million in damage — including $14 million to state highways, $12 million to county roads and buildings, and $23 million to private property. Some $4 million was spent after the flood simply on cleaning up debris, according to the California Department of Water Resources report.

In the aftermath of the flood, Humboldt Beacon correspondent Lillian Sarginson described what she saw as the untold story amid all the detailed accounts of the wreckage, loss and strife. “Thinking has been blurred ever since Monday, Dec. 21, when Mother Nature raised an angry fist and delivered her knock-out blow to Northern California,” Sarginson wrote. “By now everyone knows how great a disaster has befallen this area. The inconceivable force of water in its mad dash to the sea, the fear that spread with equal speed into the hearts of all in the path of such fury. There is another side of the story: friends. The wonderful people who rally to aid the distressed.”

Accounts of the flood are rife with heroism, bravery and kindness as a region banded together to make it through. Life magazine correspondent Jack Fincher led a team of seven reporters and photographers into Humboldt County to cover the flood and walked away impressed by a community of ranchers, loggers and lumbermen who were ready to roll up their sleeves and help their neighbors. In his story, “A Lovely Land Laid Waste by Water,” he wrote of a self-sufficient group who simply opened their freezers — which were made useless by power outages anyway — and feasted on dinners of fried chicken, stew, steak and lasagna, while directing help to those who needed it most.

“What a lot of the outside world doesn’t realize is that many people are marooned but, in most instances, not needy unless they’ve lost their homes,” Fincher wrote. “It’s pretty frustrating to an Army helicopter team to brave the wind-swept summit of a mountain, as ours did, to get to the valley on the other side and be told by a well-meaning ranger, ‘We don’t need this stuff. We’re cut off but we got all we need. Now there are some people over on the other ridge. ...’ And the copter heads over there, through low-scudding wisps of cloud and dangerous utility wires, only to be told the same thing. It’s not that the people aren’t grateful, it’s only that they’re convinced someone just over the hill must have it worse than they do.”

In recent weeks, the Journal caught up with a handful of people who were here when the waters rose. These are their stories of loss, survival and service.

'You Weren't Afraid to Cry'

Frances Rapin's car was packed with Christmas presents for her family — the 44-year-old was leaving for Marysville, Washington, where her brother lived, until she heard the bridge was out.

Soon after, Rapin, who worked for the Belcher Abstract Title Company, was enlisted to bring her knowledge of Humboldt County's terrain to a hastily gathered helicopter coordination center.

Rapin (who went by Allen at the time) gathered large maps of the flooding watersheds, and, along with a Navy Admiral, two Army colonels and a host of military and civilian personnel, took over the district attorney's office in the county courthouse. Volunteers brought in short wave radios, and Rapin helped direct pilots to the rescue calls flooding in from the Eel, Van Duzen, Klamath and Trinity river basins.

"We were taking incoming calls from various organizations and outposts and trying to get choppers to the right areas," says Rapin, who's turning 94 this month.

One call, from the Hoopa or Orleans area, was so full of cuss words Rapin won't repeat it, but the message was clear. "Keep the politicians on the ground in Eureka. Send us milk for kids and medicine," she recalls the person saying. "They were pretty desperate up there. There was no way getting in or out."

For weeks, she and others spent long days coordinating rescue efforts, putting out-of-town military pilots in touch with local spotters familiar with Humboldt County. The rescue effort wasn't without tragedy. Two helicopter crashes — one north of Trinidad and another along the Eel River — killed 11 people, including former county Supervisor Bunny Hadley. Only the pilot in the Southern Humboldt crash survived.

"We all suffered a loss with the boys that were killed," Rapin says, her eyes glossing with tears. "You weren't afraid to cry over that. When we got word a chopper was down we all held our breath."

Even harder was seeing the devastation from the air, she says — particularly the remains of Christmas packaging and presents in the trees surrounding the destroyed riverside towns.

But everyone chipped in, Rapin says. Restaurants donated food to the rescue workers, volunteers sprang up everywhere and her former employer continued to pay her — even though she spent most of those days at the command center. "It was just a lot of cooperation between a lot of people."

And her brother's presents? Delivered by an army pilot flying north to Washington.

'There Will Be No Rescue'

Marvin Goss was an 18-year-old freshman at Humboldt State University, having just completed his first semester in December 1964. He was also studying to get his private pilot's license and needed to pass just one final flight test to reach his goal. With the flight scheduled for just a few days after school let out, he said goodbye to his peers and put off returning to his family's South San Francisco home and stayed on campus. "I just wanted to get that certificate, then I could jump on a bus and be home for the holidays," Goss recalls. "It was not to be."

The trouble was the test kept getting postponed as the weather didn't cooperate. The rain just wouldn't let up, and Goss' days-long wait turned to weeks. By Christmas Eve, the bridges had washed out and Goss was stranded, so he and the small handful of students still in the dorms sat down to dinner with the resident manager. It was over dinner, Goss says, that the manager mentioned that officials were putting together a search party, explaining that a rescue helicopter carrying seven people had crashed in high winds and rain east of Big Lagoon on the afternoon of Dec. 22. The helicopter and its crew had been plucking stranded families off rooftops in the Eel River Valley and flying them to safety amid wind gusts of up to 100 mph. The chopper had just completed a successful rescue when — piloted by Lt. Donald Prince and co-pilot sub Lt. Allen L. Alltree, with Petty Officer Second Class James Ninger Jr. on board — it left the airport in McKinleyville shortly after 4 p.m. to return to Ferndale. There, the helicopter and its crew picked up four stranded civilians — Arnold “Bud” Hansen, Marie Bahnsen, Betty Kemp and Kemp’s 20-month-old daughter, Melanie. Officials lost radio contact with the crew at about 6:30 p.m.

Goss can’t recall exactly how much of this he knew, but he quickly volunteered to help with the rescue effort, believing that, with a background in mountaineering and backpacking, he could be of some use. There were about 200 people in the rescue team that set out on a steep, rugged swath of logged Louisiana Pacific property filled with heavy brush. The group spread out, Goss says, and started making its way up the hillside. “It was a bushwack,” he recalls, adding that it was raining torrentially with high winds. The crew had made it about a mile and was nearing the top of the ridge, Goss says, when the thunder and lightning grew heavy. A smell of kerosene permeated the air and Goss recalls someone saying they were getting close. Then someone shouted to stop and wait. Goss says he was standing, drenched to the bone in a steady downpour, when one of the leaders came back. “The search is successful,” he said. “But there will be no rescue.” The crew and its passengers didn’t survive.

It wasn’t until more than a week later that Goss finally got home, having hitched a ride with a travelling salesman east over State Route 299 to Redding, where he caught a bus. The experience proved to be a formative one for Goss. HSU canceled the following semester and, fearing he’d be drafted into the Army to join the Vietnam War, Goss signed up for the Air Force where he went to technical school to study weather observation. When he finally came back to Humboldt a few years later on the GI Bill, Goss got his masters degree in watershed management. “I focused on rainfall,” he says.

Surrounded by the Eel

On Dec. 21, the Eel really started coming up, and water sloshed over the threshold of 14-year-old Ginger Leonardo's house at the Leonardo & Nunes Dairy on Grizzly Bluff Road. Ginger's mom, Gerry Leonardo, and her aunt Lily Nunes, who lived next door, kept sweeping the water back out, repeating the weatherman's words they'd just heard on the radio: "The river is receding."

The families had been warned they needed to evacuate, but they weren't too worried; the Leonardos' house had burned a few years after the 1955 flood and was rebuilt on higher ground, above flood-stage they were assured. But Ginger's dad, Tony, and a hired hand from Portugal went over to her aunt and uncle's place to help Uncle John haul furniture up to their second floor. After that they moved all of the animals into the big barn, locked them in the stanchions and loaded them up with hay and grain.

Then both families holed up in the Leonardos' house. The water kept rising.

The next day, the middle of the floor buckled. "There were Christmas decorations on the coffee table," recalls Ginger (whose married name is Nunes), "and we watched as it slipped over and the decorations fell off. My dad yelled at my mom to get me and my sister up into the attic."

Her sister, Tina, who was 6, had cerebral palsy and was in a wheelchair. They struggled through the narrow opening into the attic. When the water rose to the light switches, the rest of the family members went up. For three days and two nights, the 10 of them huddled there on two small sheets of plywood. The space was shallow and they couldn't stand. They took turns lying down to rest. Ginger fretted about her prom dress and wanted to leave the attic to retrieve it. "Leave the damned dress!" her mom told her.

They ate the food Ginger had helped her mom and aunt prepare, but it wasn't enough.

"My mom told Daddy he had to go down and hunt up something to eat, so he went down," recalls Ginger. "He was gone awhile, and when he came back up he had a can of fruit cocktail and a nail. My dad, he was always loud, but he tried to be quiet and he whispered to my mom that the walls were bulging in and he was afraid if he opened a cupboard the whole wall would come down. And he told her he was afraid we weren't going to make it. So then we all started screaming." Her mother reassured them.

Tony Sr. opened the can with the nail and they shared its contents. Down below, two of their dogs clung to mattresses in the water; a third jumped out the window and disappeared. The house creaked and the water rushed loudly all around. Upstream, Pacific Lumber Co.'s log pond had failed and now logs started battering the house and piling up. Then one crashed through a window. Uncle John had cut a hole in the roof so they could see what was happening: It looked like an ocean out there, with debris poking up out of the foaming waves. They watched Tony Sr.'s old Desoto float away. Animals bobbed by. The barn somehow stayed together, but its floor boards weren't nailed down and floated with the rising waters. The family's 150 cows either drowned or broke their necks in the stanchions as the floor gave out underneath them.

One of the nights, the rain gone and the moon bright, Uncle John was looking out of the hole in the roof and saw his house fall away. He collapsed, one arm punching through sheetrock and his face splitting open on a two-by-four. Ginger recalls her dad lighting makeshift flares made of wax and newspaper and dropping them from the attic at night to see how high the water had crept.

A plane flew overhead one day. The family watched as boats tried to get to them from the Ferndale side; the water was too swift. Finally, on Christmas Eve around 3:30 p.m., two boats from the Fortuna side reached the house and, one of them nearly capsizing, brought the family to safety.

Crestmark Architectural Millworks

Brothers Scott and Sean Olsen grew up in a family of three boys and a little sister in an old Victorian in Eureka. Their dad, Eli Daniel, was a woodworker, and when he expanded from his garage into a workshop space in Arcata, Scott and Sean joined him.

Scott brought his skills as foreman at Wallace and Hinz, and Sean came onboard from Marimba One. They teamed up with their dad and launched Crestmark Architectural Millworks in 1997.

After Eli's death, his boys picked up the torch and carried it with aplomb, shifting the focus of the business from local residential projects to bigger, commercial jobs out of town. Now, with 25 employees and an 11,000 square foot workshop, they routinely work with some of the biggest contractors in the Bay Area, and recently won the bid to build the custom cabinetry and millwork for the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art (SFMOMA) remodel.

One of their most challenging and exciting projects to date, the job is massive, and detailed in scope, with lots of custom cabinetry, seating, countertops, trim, handrails and even elaborate compound trapezoidal desks. Scott says the pieces are "designed to impress at first glance." Sean agrees, adding, "as you would expect at the MOMA."

Building the bar and cabinetry for the Paragon Restaurant in San Francisco was Crestmark's big break into the Bay Area scene. In the years since, they've worked on corporate offices – think Mozilla, Google, Apple, Oracle – as well as numerous libraries, schools, hotels and high rises from Portland to Pebble Beach to Vail, Colorado.

They are often asked why they don't relocate to the Bay Area to be closer to their clients. In answer to that, Sean explains, "One of the things that's important to us is helping the local economy. We desperately need businesses like this to bring money into Humboldt County." He adds, "We try and spread it around. We buy a lot of our product from Almquist and other local companies."

Besides supporting the local economy, Scott and Sean agree that their employees are a major reason they stay here. "This is a beautiful place and people want to be able to live here and raise their families," says Sean, "and we are incredibly fortunate to have some of this area's most talented and hardworking people right here at Crestmark." Scott agrees, adding, "Our team is why we succeed at this crazy business. The way these people come together every day to meet the challenges of this job is amazing. We could never do it without them."

Crestmark is fiercely dedicated to upholding four core values: enjoyment, integrity, creativity and respect. You'll notice "enjoyment" is first. Scott explains, "We all spend a lot of our time here everyday, and if it just sucks and it's totally stressful, well then, what the heck are we doing with our lives? We need to make enjoyment a big part of what we're doing here. That way, we all enjoy coming to work and doing what we do."

If you're curious about Crestmark's projects, check out the impressive photo gallery at www.crestmarkam.com, and next time you're in San Francisco, drop by the SFMOMA, and feel a little pride in local boys done good. ●

‘Waiting on Their Roofs’

Eureka Attorney Jeremiah Scott had returned to Eureka from law school in 1964, 10 years after he graduated from Eureka High.

Scott was a captain and company commander for the Eureka unit of the Army Reserve 250th Transportation Company. On Dec. 19, he got orders from company headquarters in the Presidio — he was to mobilize 20 of the unit’s best drivers and conduct rescues with the reserve’s DUKWs, or “Ducks.”

The local reserve had 27 of the amphibious trucks (the same vehicles that brought American troops on shore at the WWII invasion of Omaha Beach).

“Our primary goal was to rescue people from homes or high ground or roofs of homes,” Scott says, but the swiftness and sheer volume of water made that immediately difficult. “The DUKWs really were not seaworthy in swift water. I was always afraid of losing a DUKW — and if you lose a DUKW you might lose somebody. So I always had three together so one could pull another one out.”

The first day, Scott and men from his unit headed south from Fortuna with orders to deliver blankets, medicine and water to Scotia and Rio Dell. But the bridge north of Rio Dell was out, and the water was too swift for the DUKWs. The southern communities of the Eel River — many of the hardest hit — would be only accessible by helicopter for some time.

Scott and his drivers turned back north, hoping to cut through Ferndale and up and over the ridge on Blue Slide Road into Rio Dell.

But, he says, “I got to Fernbridge and it was just a sea of water all the way over to Ferndale. ... I thought I could go into the water with DUKWs, but the water was so swift on the other side of the bridge that I was fearful that the water would just take those DUKWs sideways and they’d end up in the ocean.”

By the second or third day, the water had receded enough for Scott’s unit to cross the bridge, where they spent the next several days rescuing people in the Ferndale area.

“I can recall going out into the Eel River Valley to houses surrounded by water with people waiting on the roofs,” Scott says. “We had ladders so we got women and children off the roofs or off the high portions of the buildings. ... I can’t say with certainty the number but I would say several hundred.”

Greg Rumney, known as the Old Photo Guy, has collected more than 70,000 historic images of Humboldt County, including scores from the 1964 flood. He opened his photo collection up to the Journal to help make this story possible. For more on Rumney and his collection, see the online version of this story or visit www.oldphotoguy.com.

‘Captain Courageous’

The flood waters were devastating to local cattle herds, with thousands of cows drowned in barns, swept down river or left to starve in swampy flood plains. Many were swept out to sea only to wash back up on local beaches, where they lay in “bloated lumps,” as one reporter put it. But amid the carnage, one Angus steer’s tale offered hope and he became a symbol of perseverance and survival for the decimated town of Klamath.

Raised by 15-year-old Brad Hale from a “weak little calf,” according to a story by Andrew Genzoli, Bahamas was in his pasture at the Hale Ranch in Klamath Glen when the waters rose and he was washed into the engorged Klamath River and rushed 2 miles out to sea. But the steer apparently grappled atop a debris pile, and managed to stay above water. In the aftermath of the flood, as logjams washed back to shore and clogged Crescent City Harbor, fishermen “observed a movement in the debris, and discovered the Angus,” according to Genzoli’s report. “It was a dangerous task to remove the animal, but carefully, they did.” Don Ford, hailed as Bahamas’ chief rescuer, received a medal of honor for compassion and bravery from the American Humane Society for his efforts.

Bahamas’ tale of survival captured the hearts of the flood-ravaged region, and newspaper reports wrote the animal’s story with verve under headlines like “Bullish Miracle” and “Captain Courageous.” Bahamas went on to live almost two decades before his death in December 1983, having lived a life of leisure and fame. The Klamath Chamber of Commerce purchased the animal after the flood, and every spring would move him down to a specially built corral in the old Klamath town site, where “all manner of goodies are bestowed upon him by friends, former neighbors and summer tourists.”

What makes this place so great?

It's not just the natural beauty of the cool coast or sunny inland areas...

It's the people who live and work here.

Please support the local economy by purchasing from locally based businesses.

Shopping locally...

- sends 3 times more money back into our local economy than shopping at chain stores.
- builds community — you'll probably run into someone you know or make friends with your favorite shopkeeper.
- gives the community its one-of-a-kind personality by keeping unique businesses afloat.
- puts less stress on our roads and other public utilities, thereby keeping taxes lower.
- makes "green" sense — local stores are closer to the consumer, creating less traffic and pollution.

DYSON-FLATMO'S DREAMY AND DRAMATIC "THE MUSE IS ALWAYS A STRANGER." COURTESY OF SEWELL GALLERY

Fish Tail

bored spitless with what I was doing." Desperation bubbled up. The dam broke.

At Sewell Gallery's December show, Dyson-Flatmo's narrative aspirations receive VIP treatment. Surface Tension: A Visual Opera fuses the artist's pencil-lead past with a painter's artistic maturity, describing the arc of her recent transformation through theatrical grandeur. "An opera allows you to go over the top. It allows you to be extravagant," says Dyson-Flatmo. An opera also needs depth, characters and props. Most of all, it needs a story. For Dyson-Flatmo, that story is personal: "This is how it feels to me to chase a work of art."

A collection of smaller paintings set the stage, announcing the characters while teasing out snippets of meaning. There's a poised director, "the one who hears voices," listening carefully, eyebrow raised in anticipation. The playwright appears (Dyson-Flatmo used herself as a model), bedecked in carnival colors, a fluffy wig and rumpled hat. A fish darts away with a tiny umbrella in its mouth. In fact, fish, umbrellas and circles thread through nearly every piece.

The show's poster (an opera needs a poster, right?), "The Muse is Always a Stranger," amplifies these props with aplomb, visually defining Dyson-Flatmo's creative quandary. The umbrella signifies protection: Skill building made her a successful artist but restricted her true inspiration, keeping her work safe and saleable. The fish is creativity itself — that slippery little muse forever out of reach. The circle represents insight, focus and the regeneration of Dyson-Flatmo's approach.

It's not just her so-called "restless metaphors" that tell a story in this painting though. The range of Dyson-Flatmo's skill is on full display, challenging viewers' notion of who this painter really is. Expressionistic brushwork rattles against renaissance polish. Seductive beauty is shrouded behind symbols, never fully revealing itself. Sharp diagonal lines swell with restless energy, and it's clear that something is bubbling just below the surface.

At the opera's climax, the artist finally learns her lesson. "Dream and Reason" is the biggest, most forceful work in the show. Swirling geometry shines with spotlight umbrellas, exposing the riddle through steampunk shades. This tight composition leaves nothing to chance, yet the strict narrative focus nearly throws all of Dyson-Flatmo's previous work overboard. Relief and trepidation dance together as she stretches out her arm toward ...

No spoilers in this article. If you want to know how this opera ends you'll have to go see it for yourself. The curtains open Saturday, Dec. 6, from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. at Sewell Gallery in Eureka.

After the opera, be sure to waltz around the corner to Eureka Studio Arts where Leo Stafnes is showing his newest oil paintings. Stafnes is a Eureka native and sophomore at Arcata High School.

About a year ago, Stafnes stumbled upon a box of art supplies at an estate sale and wondered what to do with them. After a few classes with Jeff Stanley in Trinidad, local artist Stock Schlueter took him under his wing and Stafnes spent a few days a week painting with him. Once Schlueter took him on a plein air outing, Stafnes was hooked. "It's an expression of a passion I've had my entire life," he says.

"I've always been into hiking, and now I can do art outside while hiking! It's a perfect combination."

Stafnes' landscapes have an erudite combination of color, composition and technique, but there's more than that. "The attachment is more of a spiritual conversation with the place and I convey that artistically," he says with the calm assuredness of a life-long painter. "The artwork itself is a more superficial layer." These aren't just "oh that's cool" one-offs — Stafnes' paintings are the real deal. With just a year under his artistic belt, it's stunning to think where this kid is headed. ●

Art is elusive, says local painter Micki Dyson-Flatmo. "It may entirely swim away from you."

It's not that Dyson-Flatmo is unfamiliar with painting or art — she's a fifth-generation woman artist. As a child, she hung out in her grandma's studio surrounded by oil paints. In her 20s, Dyson-Flatmo would sit for hours at a time with a sharpened pencil, crafting intricate, conceptual images layered with stream-of-consciousness symbolism. But no one ever saw them. "I was young, and it was automatic and I took [my skills] for granted." She'd finish one, stash it away and start another.

Now in her early 60s, Dyson-Flatmo has built a career out of art. She's perfected her techniques in pastels and paints: expressing herself, learning the mediums and "playing the gallery game." It's been enjoyable, but mechanical. In creating marketable art for others, Dyson-Flatmo's craving for concept took a back seat to technical skill. Recently, she says, "I got to the point where I was absolutely Cheer up!*

Mood-alleviating shows to usher you through the SAD

By Jennifer Savage

Hello, dear readers! How are you feeling? Perhaps you, too, are struggling to adjust to the early darkness, thinking it must be about time to crawl into bed and then realizing it's only 7 o'clock. Maybe the lethargy is compounded by the fact that we're reaching the end of the semester and that people who give your days meaning — or even you, yourself — are preparing to move away.

I imagined you feeling this way, lonely in the evenings and wondering if you'll make it through winter, as I strolled down a Sacramento sidewalk thick with fallen leaves, all brilliantly orange and red under the shining streetlights, noting the utter lack of a Sunday nightlife in that city and feeling grateful for the endless opportunities to savor life in the Humboldt Nation. I know your despair may not be quite as I described it — it may be “happiness,” for example — but whatever mood you're in, let's rally and go out this week, shake off any winter blues and lose ourselves in what is an especially fine lineup of live music options.

Show of the Week!

Because, whoa, drop everything and let this etch itself on your brain: On Monday, Dec. 8, Los Angeles-based garage rock quartet Allah-Las is playing at the Jambalaya. If you know the band, you're thinking, “Hey, that's amazing! I must get tickets!” If you don't know it, let me give you a bit of background (TL;DR version is: extremely cool, go get tickets). The band formed in 2008 with a clearly shared love for harmonies and pop hooks, psychedelic flavor and unhindered rock 'n' roll. They released a single of “Cata-maran” and “Long Journey” in 2011, produced by friend of the group and old-school soul revivalist Nick Waterhouse. Their latest effort, Worship the Sun, intoxicates with a laid-back charm that'll have you believing in endless summer. Only $12! Show starts at 9 p.m. and is 21-and-over. (Sorry, kids! Skip to the end!) L.A.'s Tashaki Miyaki and Eureka's Lost Luvs open.

Thursday's percussive

Live-band-on-high-tech-hyperdrive Eoto features multi-instrumentalist Michael Travis and percussionist/vocalist Jason Hann — best known for their rhythm section role in The String Cheese Incident. The band, along with Buku and Willy Joy, performs at the Arcata Theatre Lounge. Doors open at 9:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 advance at www.worldfamousparty.com, $20 advance at Wildberries, People's Records and The Works, and $25 at the door. Show is 21-and-over.

HSU's hat trick

The HSU Music Department welcomes December with three totally different concert opportunities.

On Friday, the HSU Symphonic Band rides the range with John Williams' music for the 1972 John Wayne western, The Cowboys — Paul Cummings conducts — and also performs music based on English and Korean folk melodies, all in Fulkerson Recital Hall. A group of HSU singers will preview “Greensleeves” and other folk songs adapted by Gustav Holst in his Second Suite, which the band plays in full. Admission is $8/$5 seniors and children, with HSU students admitted free.

On Saturday, the HSU Calypso Band, Percussion Ensemble and World Percussion Group storm the Van Duzer Theatre with monumental percussive classics by John Cage, dance drumming from the Ewe people of Ghana and high-energy dance music from Trinidad (the island), including two classics by Lennox “Boogsie” Sharpe and Ray Holman. Eugene Novotney and Howard Kaufman direct. Admission is $10/$5/$3.

On Sunday, the HSU Madrigal Singers — in costume — begin the holiday season with their traditional program of madrigals and English folk songs centered on young love with news flashes from Renaissance England, plus the Mad River Transit Singers perform jazz, bebop and blues with a four-piece backing band. Harley Muilenburg directs both ensembles in Fulkerson Recital Hall. Admission is $8/$5 seniors and children, HSU students free. All three concerts begin at 8 p.m. Tickets available from HSU Ticket Office (826-3928) or at the door.

Friday's wild rumpus

If you show up at Arcata's Veteran's Memorial Building at 7 p.m., you will discover Dreamland, a nighttime flea market/rock 'n' roll party — how can you pass that up? Especially with L.A.'s The Zermatts (Daniel Johnston meets the Velvet Underground) and the darling (and busy!) Lost Luvs. $8 gets you in.

Also on Friday, everyone's favorite A-town jam band, Liquid Kactus, plus VJ Marmalade

Sky, DJ Cha-B and RXR promise to bring you “a psychedelic night to remember” — the exact ratio of psychedelic experience to memory retainment has yet to be determined, but as the show's Facebook page says, “Long Live Rock!” Tickets are $10 at the Jambalaya, show is 21-and-over.

Saturday's feel-good

The Jambalaya hosts a Toys For Tots Music Showcase with The Gas Station, Vidagua, Madi Simmons, Little Kidd Lost, Redwood Blue, SFB, Dead Oak Tree and DJ Wise. Bring a new unwrapped toy with a value of at least $5 or offer up a $5 donation at the door — all toys and donations go to helping local families over the holiday season. Show starts at 9 p.m. and is 21-and-over.

Monday's all-ages

Hand it to Blondie's (again) for providing an all-ages, and by all accounts very cool, venue.

For those unable to make the Allah-Las, seeing The Cosmonauts is an extremely fine option, even if they are from Fullerton, a place I still begrudge due to a bad ex-boyfriend experience. I digress, although coincidentally, the band reminds me a lot of the moody, elegantly anguished-yet-catchy acts of the late '80s. How weird is it that Monday night is bringing two notable out-of-town big deal bands to Arcata? That's rhetorical. Just be prepared to hand over $5 and clap along. Doors at 9 p.m. The engrossing local Mother Vines opens.

WHO: HSU Calypso Band

WHEN: Saturday, Dec. 6 at 8 p.m.

WHERE: Van Duzer Theatre

TICKETS: $10, $5 seniors and children, $3 HSU students

One more thing

*Technically, telling depressed people to “cheer up” is highly ineffective, especially for those with low self-esteem. (Google it.) Please know that we understand it must suck to be feeling the way you do about the various things and if you can't muster the energy to go out, that's OK. Music is still good therapy — slip on some headphones and listen to your favorite songs till the darkness passes. You are loved.

Etc.

Hum Plate Roundup

Pies, poppers and piles of rings

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Pining for Pie

How did your Thanksgiving go? Maybe a wedge of Costco's satellite-dish sized pumpkin pie satisfied your cravings, maybe it didn't. Even if all your favorites showed up on the table, you are not done with pie. North Coast Co-op's (25 Fourth St., Eureka; 811 I St., Arcata) pumpkin cream pie is worth extending pumpkin-flavored-whatever season ($5.25). The small tart shell is painted with white chocolate (keeps it from going soggy and makes you feel genuinely cared for) and filled with a fluffy and decadent mixture of whipped cream and spiced pumpkin filling. If you have to be hit in the face with a pie, make it this one. It's like eating pumpkin pie with the amount of whipped cream you'd top it with if only you weren't being watched. And yet it's small enough to share with three friends or kill in one Netflix binge. Really depends on how Thanksgiving went.

Poppin'

A reader emailed a hot tip that sent us to Pachanga (1802 Fifth St., Eureka) for jalapeño poppers ($9.50). Aren't they all kind of the same? Push away all those unhappy memories of TGI Friday's and its frozen and fried heartburn bullets.

Pachanga's arrive four-to-a-plate and looking like stunted corn dogs. The thick cornmeal batter is savory and crunchy outside and soft and moist inside, like a quality hush puppy. Cozied within are fresh chilies, fat and deep green, roasted daily for a whiff of smoky charring while maintaining their crispness. There's a bite, of course, but it's mellowed by the roasting, and the ribs and seeds are completely removed and replaced by stretchy, white queso blanco. Be not afraid. Feel not ripped off, either, as one order of these little wonders is substantial enough to share, and the accompanying cheese sauce with peppers and tomatoes will not go to waste.

Ringside

There is a lot going on at Shamus T Bones (1911 Truesdale St., Eureka), what with the sparking Tesla coil, the judgmental taxidermy and the controversially boiled ribs. Take the advice of another Journal tipster and focus your attention instead on a plate of Walla Walla onion rings ($7.99). The world's most honest waiter informed us these rings, unlike the frozen ones you get as a side, are freshly beer battered and fried. The Walla Walla is one of those large, sweet onions, the flavor of which comes through since the batter has little salt. Sprinkle if you must, or better yet dip your piping hot rings in a little ranch or the house barbecue sauce. But the crust is just as it should be, brown and crunchy and plenty of it, a nice contrast to the tender onion underneath. And it's meatless, so that mounted buck can drop the pissy stare, thank you. ●

Good Talk

You don't need a lecture. Wait, maybe you do. The independently organized TEDxHumboldtBay talks aren't the chalk-dry prattling that's trained you to wince when you see a PowerPoint slide. You'll see why at noon on Sunday, Dec. 7 in the College of the Redwoods Performing Arts Theatre, when two dozen local speakers take on the theme of outlaws ($25).

It's five hours, but with breaks and snacks. You sat through those Lord of the Rings movies — you can do this. What kind of talks? Well, Dean Schubert delves into the outsider history of now-ubiquitous tattoos, Linda Stansberry (hello there, Journal contributor!) looks at the prospect of an extraordinary life as a single woman, Spencer Ruelos talks about community among LGBT gamers, Jennifer Savage (she of the Journal's "Setlist" column) taps into her work in marine activism, and tracker and transgender woman Diana Totten shares her adventures finding herself.

But that ain't all. Ali Freedlund, Betty Chinn, Dante De Genova, Kintay Johnson, Lisa Rossbacher, Mike Dronkers, Rebecca Kimbel, Ron Samuels, Tamarah Gehlen, Ryann Citro-Hough, Amy Bohner, Brian Smith, Jasmine Allard, Mary Gelinas, Paul Gallegos, Sherae O'Shaughnessy, Stephen Cunha, Elayna Kuster and Travis Woo are all on the bill covering topics from homelessness to music, to motherhood, to feminism to social dancing. Listen up and you might learn something good.

Theory goes for the heart, Bosses aims low

By John J. Bennett

Reviews

THE THEORY OF EVERYTHING. There are occasional movies — usually romantic dramas, often biopics — that strive for sincerity above other things. While this is an admirable, humane goal, it is a difficult one. For one, compared to the majority of contemporary popular entertainment, something overtly honest and sweet can seem disingenuous. For another, with so many variables in play — performance, editing, all the myriad technical aspects — there are ample opportunities for good intention to wander off the path. One faked facial expression or mistimed cut can wreck the whole enterprise. The Theory of Everything attempts this delicate balance of authenticity and kindness, and if I seem to be struggling a little with it, I am. For the most part, it's likeable and well executed. But it also might be trying too hard.

The movie opens at University of Cambridge in 1963, where disheveled cosmology whiz kid Stephen Hawking (Eddie Redmayne, My Week With Marilyn, Les Misérables) is having trouble deciding on a thesis topic. That he figures it out is a foregone conclusion by now, but in the process he also meets a girl and falls in love with her. Jane (Felicity Jones) initially seems an unlikely match for odd young Stephen, but such is romance. As their courtship proceeds, it becomes the primary focus of the narrative and they fall in love. In the midst of this exciting time, just as Stephen's nascent genius begins to emerge, doctors diagnose him with a variant of Lou Gehrig's disease and give him two years to live. It's a turning point for Stephen, of course, but also because Jane refuses to leave Stephen's side.

This first section of the movie succeeds resoundingly on a few levels. Redmayne's portrait of a young man starting to recognize the signs of his ailment is subtly devastating. And Jones, as a tough, smart young woman making the commitment to love such a young man, summons eminently watchable luminescence and courage. (It's worth noting here that the screenplay is based on Jane's autobiography.) The depiction of their early relationship evokes young love, excitement and safety and risk. But nothing can stay as it was, and so the marriage advances with Stephen's disease. He flouts his prognosis, surviving ever-increasing paralysis to bring his work and family to fruition. The strain of caring for her husband and their ever-growing family begins to wear on Jane, and the seams of the relationship begin to show.

At this point, as the movie starts to get into territory that's harder to navigate, it falters slightly. Although Redmayne's physical acting is impressive, it veers dangerously close to parody. It requires an invested, attentive audience to look past the broader aspects and see the subtler, emotional points of the performance. As the Hawkings' marriage ages, it starts to feel habitual. To his credit, director James Marsh (of the excellent documentary Man on Wire) does not overdramatize the inevitable strain in the relationship; instead, he underplays it, perhaps too intentionally. In comparison to the larger than life events of the movie's first act, the subsequent sections lack the same impact and import. The tonal shift from the fireworks of new love to the quiet warmth of a well-worn relationship, to the cloudiness of eventual uncertainty is clearly defined but becomes less compelling as it moves along. PG13. 123m.

HORRIBLE BOSSES 2. It has become clear to me that comedy is the first to fall in the war of attrition that is contemporary American cinema. Good ones are pretty thin on the ground out here, and we can only ask so much of Judd Apatow, Adam McKay and David Wain. In the meantime, we get middling offerings like Horrible Bosses 2 which, in spite of an extremely funny cast, generates laughs mostly incidentally.

Nick (Jason Bateman), Kurt (Jason Sudeikis) and Dale (Charlie Day), have thrown off the yoke of servitude to go into business for themselves. They've developed a kooky shampoo-dispenser thing called the Shower Buddy (really a clunky, low-rent MacGuffin). After they debut the product on the morning news, they are approached by a father and son catalog retailing team (Christoph Waltz and Chris Pine) with a too-good-to-be-true offer. So of course our boys immediately take out a gigantic bridge loan, open a factory and fill the order. Only — surprise, surprise! — that father and son team pulls the financial rug out from under them. Which, of course, leads them to hatch a kidnapping/ransom plot. This, in turn, allows the movie to put them in a number of hackneyed, ostensibly hilarious scenarios featuring cameos by Jamie Foxx and Jennifer Aniston reprising their roles from the first movie.

Charlie Day can make me laugh standing still, Sudeikis can be amazingly silly, and Bateman is one of the best deadpan reactors in the business. And the supporting cast is packed with talent. So it is inevitable that I would find something to like in Horrible Bosses 2. Unfortunately, none of it can be attributed to the script or its execution. R. 108m.

To Sleep, Perchance to be Brainwashed

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

All animals with brains sleep. Why? In humans, at first blush it seems like a perfect waste of time for us to spend a third of our lives in somnolent inactivity. If I could have harvested all those apparently useless hours, I'd be the equivalent of 108 instead of my youthful 72! And anyway, sleep is dangerous — more so to our Paleolithic ancestors, at the mercy of hungry carnivores, than to ourselves. What possible evolutionary function could have been more important than staying alert for sabertooth tigers in the night?

No one has come up with a single, definitive answer. Dr. William Dement, founder of the Stanford University Sleep Research Center, summed up 50 years of research thus: "As far as I know, the only reason we need to sleep that is really, really solid is because we get sleepy."

One possibility: We sleep to consolidate our memories. (Objection: Is remembering what happened yesterday really more important than preserving us from nocturnal leopards?) Or, perhaps: We sleep to reduce the brain's drain on the body's limited resources of energy. Processing our sensory input burns calories — which our ancestors obtained by day from hunting and gathering — so they conserved that energy by "switching off" their senses at night. (Same objection: Surely it's better to burn some energy to stay awake and alert than to be eaten.)

A promising line of research, outlined in several studies published in the last two years, suggests: We sleep to clear our brains of toxic metabolic byprod- ucts. This is analogous to how the body's lymphatic system flushes toxic waste from muscle cells after strenuous activity. Our hard-working brains (which consume 20 percent of bodily energy) use a similar cleansing arrangement, dubbed the "glymphatic system" (after the brain's glial cells). When we sleep, the glymphatic system goes to work with cerebrospinal fluid, flushing our brains of waste products which accumulate while we're awake. More prosaically, sleep gives our late-night cleaners the space to do essential "brain-washing" janitorial work.

"We" at this point includes our fellow mammals, lab rats; human studies are still in the future. However, this tentative theory looks sufficiently promising to bring up the question, What damage are we doing to ourselves by shortening our sleeping time? (We sleep an hour or two less per night, on average, compared with 100 years ago.) Toxic byproducts cleared while we sleep include the beta-amyloid and tau proteins found in patients with degenerative brain diseases such as Alzheimer's and Parkinson's. According to University of Pennsylvania sleep researcher Dr. Sigrd Veasey, "If we don't sleep well, we may be allowing the very things that cause neural degeneration to pile up unchecked ... we may be doing irreparable damage to the brain..."

And while a causal relationship between less sleep and Alzheimer's is far from proven, you might at least consider heading to bed (perchance to dream) rather than watching The Late Show. ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) is heading to the sofa to flush out his brain after working on this column. You can head to local booksellers to find anthologies of five years of Field Notes.
